MEMORANDUM FOR: DDCI

Although probably defensible under the Economy in Government Act, and although we have done it before, this gives me some heartburn. In the past, such support has been misperceived; I suspect it can and will be again.

Tending to obscure the straightforward economic rationale is the 3rd paragraph assurance that the fact of assistance will be tightly held. It will leak.

Mr. William J. Casey
Director
Central Intelligence Agency
Washington, D.C. 20505

Dear Mr. Casey:

The assistance of your Office of Technical Services is requested in providing security printing services relative to the 1984 Presidential Campaign.

The scope and nature of this work would be Press and Personnel Identity Badges, similar to those provided in the 1968, 1972, 1976, and 1980 Campaigns. These were produced in a variety of colors and configurations suitable for quick change and applicable to multiple candidates and events. As in the past, we will be prepared to absorb any material costs deemed significant.

This service is requested of your Agency because of its demonstrated expertise in the design and production of security printing as well as the inherent security aspects, both physical and need-to-know, so important to the mission of our Dignitary Protective Division. Conversely, we wish to assure you that the Agency's graphics contributions to this mission are need-to-know within our organization and is privy to only a few select agents.] ✓

With your concurrence, representatives of the Dignitary Protective Division will meet with your Graphics Officers to discuss further details of this request.

May we take this opportunity to express our continuing appreciation for the sustained professional and quick-reaction services provided by your graphics activity.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

John R. Simpson
Director
